You, the Jury (33:00) ★ ★ ★

This video involves the students first as jurors, then as legislative drafters, and finally as trial lawyers, judges and witnesses. The video begins with the trial of a teenager who bought a "hot" stereo and has been accused of receiving stolen property. After the trial, the students will decide guilty or not guilty. In the second segment of the video, a law professor walks the class through the Constitutional issues that were presented in the trial: the Confrontation clause, the Right to Trial by Jury, and Search and Seizure. These issues come alive as the video flashes between the words of the Constitution and their actual manifestation during the trial. The students will see an actual state criminal statute outlawing the receipt of stolen property. As most burglaries are supported by people who buy stolen goods, should the law be changes to make it easier to convict these people? If so, how might the statute be changes? Rewriting a statute forces students to write with precision. Students can then conduct their own trial. © 1995 United Learning

Age of Constantine and the Germanic Invasions, The (24:34) ★ ★

The 4th century was a tumultuous and uncertain time in European history. Known as the Middle Ages, or the Dark Ages, this era was marked by a tremendous clash of political, cultural and religious ideas throughout Europe. This video presents Constantine the Great who ruled the Roman Empire -- struggling to maintain control over vast conquered territories, while barbarians infiltrated the countryside and Europe was divided into various Germanic kingdoms. Powerful Frankish leaders, like Clovis and Charles Martel united the Germanic peoples and stopped the spread of Islam into Europe by defeating the Huns who were invading from Mongolia. This program illuminates this "dark" time through the presentation of these historical figures, along with pivotal cultural, religious, and political developments that so significantly influenced European history throughout this period. © 2004 AIMS Multimedia

This program illustrates the deepening of the world-wide rift between the Western-aligned nations and the Soviet-aligned group, and the subsequent escalation of the "arms race." America's early warning systems and SAC bombers are rendered obsolete by the Soviet's ICBMs; the U.S. responds with missile-carrying nuclear subs. The U.S. tests effects of radiation on troops and equipment by exploding hundreds of nuclear bombs; families build fallout shelters; students learn bomb survival skills. Hungarians revolt against Soviet rule. In 1957, the U.S.S.R. puts Earth's first artificial satellite, Sputnik, into orbit. A U.S. spy plane is shot down over the Soviet Union. John F. Kennedy defeats Richard Nixon for President in 1960. Fact-filled media support for American History and World History units on the technological, political, military, and cultural consequences felt in the '50s and '60s from the after-effects of World War II, and U.S. responses to Soviet aggression in the Cold War years. © 1986 AIMS Multimedia

High Middle Ages, The (23:00) ★★ ★★

The High Middle Ages were plagued by famine, disease and warfare yet characterized by political and religious reforms. In Europe, people lived in a three-tiered feudal system with the king holding supreme power. In 1215, the Magna Carta limited royal power and established the precursor of modern-day parliaments. During that time, the Church instituted codes of behavior limiting violence between feuding knights, and Pope Urban II led the first in a series of Crusades to regain control of Jerusalem. Mortality was high. Famine and the Black Death wiped out almost half of the population of Europe, compounding the hardship caused by battles between feuding knights and the Hundred Years' War. This program presents the pivotal social, religious and political developments of an era that significantly influenced European history. © 2004 AIMS Multimedia

World War II: The Japanese American Experience (35:41) ★ ★ ★

Many Japanese immigrants of the 1920s thought they had found a refuge of calm and prosperity in the United States. Through hard work and perseverance in the face of discrimination, they progressed toward financial wellbeing and social acceptance. Then on December 7, 1941, the horrifying destruction of Pearl Harbor shattered everything – wiping out years of labor and casting into doubt the loyalty that Japanese Americans held for their adopted country. This compelling program presents an intimate portrait of American families of Japanese descent who in WWII faced an eruption of suspicion, racism, and hatred. Their poignant stories mirror those of thousands of Japanese Americans who fell victim to political hysteria. More than 100,000 individuals were stripped of their possessions and forcibly moved to relocation camps. Out of this chaos, a segregated military unit of Japanese Americans known as the 442nd Regimental Combat Team was formed. These volunteer soldiers believed that, for the future of all Japanese Americans, they must demonstrate their allegiance to their country. This group soon became the most heavily decorated unit of its size and length.
